(c) whether the meet saw hope of improving political relations with China despite the border dispute;

(d) what is the status of the border dispute and how Government hopes to settle it; and

(e) does the Government hope to push economic relations, putting the border dispute in the backbumer ?

THE MINISTER OF STATE IN THE MINISTRY OF DEFENCE (PROF. CHAMANLAL GUPTA): (a) to (e) The 5th Asian Security Conference on"'Asian Security and China in the period 2000-2010" was organised by the Institute for Defence Studies and Analyses in New Delhi from 27th to 29th January, 2003. India-China relation was not per se included in the theme of discussions at the Conference. However, while delivering the concluding address there, Raksha Mantri had expressed optimism that India and China would arrive at consensus through continuous, dialogue and accommodation of competing interests in the near future. He had also observed that China had made good progress on economic front in the last two decades and India might learn a lesson from them on this front.

Although contentious issues like the boundary problem between the two countries are to be settled, the economic relation between them has been showing an upswing.

As regards boundary dispute between India and China, the two sides have been discussing the boundary question based on the institutional framework provided by the two Agreements signed by them in 1993 and 1996 with the objective of seeking a mutually acceptable settlement of the issue.
